

Right Where we're Supposed to Be

May 17

Today is the single most perfect day of my life. The sun is shining; the air is still as the aftermath of winter offers a gentle hint of spring. I feel a momentary sadness, realizing this is the only time I will experience these moments, these thoughts, in the uniqueness of this perfect day.

We are right where our Higher Power wants us to be: in complete peace and acceptance of what is. We concede that even though this may not look as we had hoped, we trust and have surrendered to the moment, appreciating what is, not yearning for what is not.

Quietly comforted, a gentle knowing everything is as it should be, cascades over us. The gentle rhythm of life's succession of all things visible and invisible can only be orchestrated through the omnipotence of a Higher Power.

Thanks to that Higher Power, we are safe, and protected. In these inspirational moments of clarity, all is reconciled and moving as one, as we follow a force we cannot hear.

We know we are being led and trust a process we cannot see.

TODAY'S MEDITATION

I'm grateful for faith that says I am exactly where I'm supposed to be, just for today. There are no mistakes in God's world.
