

We are Being Led

May 28

I always believed I was just existing. Events and situations happened, good and bad, but always random. My part was to complain and be the victim, but I didn't bother to look for anything greater than myself. Life was just what happened. No one was in charge. But when I quit kicking and screaming and embraced acceptance of what life is, I noticed a gentle shift in my thinking.

That shift starts as a spiritual awakening, an assurance from deep inside that speaks to us of walking, with complete trust, over a bridge of faith. Our faith convinces us to turn away from the twilight of where we've been, while our intentions teach us to see with clarity, that there are no coincidences. Our old way of looking at our lives was with the intent to self-sabotage. And so, we turn away from that too, and go forward, knowing we are moving closer to a bridge of faith we cannot see.

The first step we take to cross that bridge compels an instant awareness of all we have ignored for a lifetime. We feel a warm shield of light surround us. Each step forward, says with assurance, there are no mistakes in our Higher Power's world, as the power of a spiritual oneness penetrates our consciousness. Convinced, although we cannot see, we feel sure we no longer walk alone. We know now we never did. With this sureness of knowing, we surrender to faith.

We are being led.

Aware now that everything we need is already within us, we reach the other side of that bridge of faith.

A voice whispers you can never go back to that state of unconsciousness. For those who accept what is, there comes a willingness to follow our intuition. The peaceful, pure joy of all that is reliable unfolds in our Higher Power's perfect timing.

We are awake. We are being led, and stand right where we're supposed to be at this moment.

TODAY'S MEDITATION

I'm grateful for faith that says I am exactly where I'm supposed to be, just for today. There are no mistakes in God's world.
